

International Parent-Centred Network (IPCN)

Title of the webinar:	Supporting families with restorative practice: a theoretical and practical analysis.
Date and time (CET):	30 th October 2023
Hosted by (organisation/university(-college))	Nottingham Trent University
Web link and/or code to sign in:	(recorded PowerPoint presentation) Click here to watch the video
Lecturer	Jo Reynolds – Senior Lecturer Youth Justice Social Work, Care and Community Department NTU Jo Reynolds is a Senior Lecturer in Youth Justice in the Social Work, Care and Community Department at Nottingham Trent University. Jo has over 10 years’ experience working in practice, with a focus on restorative justice/practice. Predominately, this has been delivering restorative justice to victims and perpetrators of crime but also supporting families/parents to manage conflict within the family unit. Jo’s most recent research focuses on restorative interventions and how this might be key to supporting refugee/migrant parents.
Abstract	Restorative practice in family support work is the foundation to building and sustaining positive relationships, aiding effective communication and enabling behaviour change (Williams, 2019). It is especially vital when there has been harm in the family unit and will seek to address and repair the harm caused. Therefore, knowing how to deliver restorative interventions is a vital skill for any social worker to have. But what is restorative practice? how do you deliver such interventions? And is it effective? This webinar will address the above questions from a theoretical and practical perspective, but will also analyse the core principles of restorative practice; collaboration, fairness, voluntary participation, respect, honesty, trust, safety, non-discrimination and accessibility (Restorative Justice Council, 2020)

Reference to the four dimensions of IPCN (choose one or more)	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Social Discourse <input type="checkbox"/> Organisation Development <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Theories& Methods <input type="checkbox"/> Research
Optional: Recommended reading/s	Williams, A. (2019). 'Family support services delivered using a restorative approach: A framework for relationship and strengths-based whole-family practice'. Child & family social work , 24(4), 555–564. https://doi.org/10.1111/cfs.12636
Note	All webinars will be in English. Webinars will be recorded